"WHAT DOES WEATHER HAVE TO DO WITH THE PRICE OF FISH?"

Hubbs-Sea World Research Institute executive director William E. Evans will attempt to increase our understanding of the marine environment at a 7:30 p.m. Wednesday, Dec. 11, lecture at the University of San Diego.

"What Does Weather Have to do With the Price of Fish?" is the title of his talk, the last in a series of science issues seminars.

Evans will discuss ways of preventing exploitation of products from the seas. "When we walk through the produce, dairy and meat sections of a supermarket we just expect the price of oranges to be higher if Florida or California has had a big freeze, or beef if the corn crop has failed.

"Similarly, products from the seas and the economies that depend on them can be affected as drastically as those which are produced on land."

The lecture will run for two hours in Manchester Executive Conference Center, followed by a wine and cheese reception. Admission is $10.
